two hollow profiles adapted to be disposed parallel to each other, a plurality of rods to connect the two hollow profiles so as to form a grilling surface, and the hollow profiles including first and second tubes respectively, each having a cylindrical cross section and each with a diameter, the diameter of the first tube being sufficiently larger than the diameter of the second tube to allow the second tube with the smaller diameter to be inserted inside the first tube with the larger diameter for transport purposes, wherein

one of the tubes has holes in a side facing the other tube to accommodate one end of the rods serving as the grilling surface, a top quarter of a circumference of the other tube facing the one tube has slots to match the number of holes for accommodating opposite ends of the rods, said slots running in a circumferential direction of the other tube through an angle of 90° from a top vertex line of the other tube through to a side vertex line facing the one tube such that when the two tubes are pushed towards each other after inserting the rods, the rods extend far enough into the other tube to ensure that ~~such that the opposite ends of~~ the rods cannot be lifted vertically out of the slots of the other tube, and two connecting rods to connect the two tubes so as to run through holes in the two opposite tube walls at the ends of the tubes, each of said connecting rods being provided with a tightening arrangement for pulling together the two tubes to form a stable grilling surface.
